

Suzanne Strong

Photographer of "Here"

Suzanne Strong has been asking for camera equipment every Christmas since she was 8 years old. Always fascinated with old family photos, Suzanne has been an avid fan of photography since she was a child. After years of gifts of point and shoot cameras, Suzanne was finally allowed to borrow her dad's manual camera in order to learn this art that she had so long been admiring.

After her son was born, the passion for photography came out even stronger, as she was blessed with a perfect subject. Suzanne then inherited her grandfather's Pentax K1000 and delved in to portraits of her son and later her daughter. In addition to portraiture, she began to creatively capture the world around her.

Almost completely self-taught, Suzanne now has a strong reputation for her artistic and interesting photos.

"Here" is the latest collection of Suzanne's photos. All were taken around the Seattle area, with many images taken at the soon-to-be "redeveloped" Fun Forest at the Seattle Center.

Suzanne lives in the Seattle area with her husband and her two children. In addition to photography, she enjoys cooking, running, reading, music, and spending time with family and friends.
